Dear Bishops / Major Superiors / Fathers / Sisters / Brothers

The type of persons who come into religious communities is varied in their personality, motivation, interest and commitment. The Enneagram is a tool for understanding the personalities and their each of the nine types contains two common elements: a consistent motivating force and an unrecognized gift at the core of the personality. The result in our day-to-day experience is that each of the nine types holds a unique set of values and standards. This is how we make judgments regarding what is constructive versus what is destructive in our lives.

The nine personality types of the Enneagram are expressed in people with infinite diversity because of the myriad of individual factors that go into the making of each person. However, because each of the Enneagram's nine personality types is an unconscious point of view, they describe patterns. They uncover nine predetermined sets of issues that people pay attention to while simultaneously ignoring or dismissing other issues that, from an objective point of view, are equally important. They also describe nine typical patterns of responding to these issues.

In our society we educate the mind; we train and discipline the body. But we leave emotional education to chance. Emotional confusion causes stress in our relationships both at home or religious communities and in the workplace. Unconscious emotions rule our lives and make other people and relationships a mystery. Unruly or compelling emotions drive us to do things not in our own best interest. The Enneagram is about educating the emotions! Emotion is the irrational side of human beings that is a mystery. The nine personality types of the Enneagram reveal the self-harming emotional states that create confusion and chaos in our own hearts and spread into our relationships. This is an attempt to discover oneself and to help forcees to discover themselves.
